Michael Torres, Executive Director

lt's a rare day that I don't think about Christopher. I know that Christopher's memory lives on because of the sustaining support of our community, donors, volunteers, agency partners and staff. As the old adage goes, "it takes a village," and for that, we are thankful.

child abuse, knowledge is one of our best weapons.

reflected in this annual report. More and more, after their initial forensic interview, children are returning to the Center has become the expert source for information on child abuse and parents or caregivers are returning for threapy, parenting classes and parents who seek education on identification, reporting and prevention. After all, in the fight against neglect, making us the go-to for community organizations, professionals and parents who seek education on identification, reporting and prevention. Since the first child walked through our doors in 1992, our commitment to protecting this community's youngest abuse victims has been unwavering. Over the years, we have grown and our services have expanded to include intervention and education, something you'll see reality paved the way for so many other children to get the help they need.

Jennifer was just four years old when her younger brother Christopher was tragically killed in 1990 at the hands of their stepfather. Christopher's death led to much-needed reform in the way child abuse cases were handled in Travis County and continues to provide inspiration for me and the sentire Child Protection Team. Whenever a particularly difficult case comes through our doors, I often think of Christopher and how his sad

I was recently reminded of how har we've come as an organization, and as a community, by a simple comment on our organization's Facebook page. It wasn't what was said but who said it that took me back through the years. The name was Jennifer Wohlers Velasco...

Lear Friends,

The Center for Child Protection spent $3,742,798 toward total operations, and held $7,701,219 in net assets at the end of 2013. The generosity and support of our donors is essential to the safety of children in Travis County. We could not respond to the level of need without this community's commitment. To see a complete list of our donors who contributed $500 and above in 2013, please visit centerforchildprotection.org/about-us/financial-information.
